Justice Goff Will Attempt to Hasten the Trial of the Gangsters as He Did That of Becker.

"Dago Frank," "Whitey" Lewis, "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood"-the four gunmen-were called to the bar before Justice Goff in extraordinary term of the Supreme Court at 2.10 o'clock this afternoon, and in that order took their seats at the prisoners' table where Lleut. Becker sat when convicted of hiring them to assassinate Herman Rosenthal. All four defendants, it was explained before they were permitted to sit down, are included with Becker, Jack Sullivan and William Shapiro in the indictment charging the murder of the gambler-informer in front of the Metropole Hotel on July 16 last. Under this indictment there is not a shadow of difference in the guilt of any of the seven accused.

The four prisoners were summoned into the tribunal immediately after Justice Goff took his place. In the custody of four deputy sheriffs they came in with a rush of nervous haste, fairly bolting through the doorway and trotting through the outer aisle beside the barred windows of the courtroom. They kept their eyes front and did not glance to right or left, and their faces were set with a fixed stare. As they faced Clerk Penny and heard their names called their shoulders twitched and they did not know what to do with their hands.
